Start with a basic, keyword search.
Look for subject headings which describe your research. In this case we’ll copy SENECA (North American people) to use in an advanced search.
Paste the subject heading into the box at left and change the search field to SU Subject Terms. Then Search.
By determining one good subject heading, we have narrowed our search to 138 articles (from the 616 results of initial search).

If you see this direction with a citation it means that the article is not readily available. You’ll need to complete an interlibrary loan request form, which will then be sent Edison Librarians, who will attempt to find another library to supply a copy. This may take time as well as possibly cost money.
There are other ways to limit your search and strengthen your results. For example, you can limit to full text articles. If you scroll down the left side of the page, you’ll see the other ways to limit the search.
